

Jessica Alba Dynasty League – 2021 Season Preview

1. Introduction

Welcome to the second year of our dynasty league. After an eventful 2020 season, in more ways than one, I know that we're all eager for the kick-off of the NFL season and the fantasy adventure that accompanies it.

I'd like to congratulate Ross on his victory for the last time and wish you all almost the best of luck for the season ahead. At least we don't have to worry about Ross gloating for at least another 12 months given the sorry state of his side.

There are ample stats on our website and on Sleeper so I won't go as heavily into these as before but thought it might be interesting, as well as previewing teams, to do a little before and after. How much have our teams changed with all the trading, draft, auction and waivers? Also, a couple of metrics about what the often-maligned experts think now and did they get it right on the whole last season.

It was a disappointing 2020 for Neil and his Giants and it's not looking to be too much better this year if the predictions are anything to go by. Neil has one of the largest turnovers in players in the league. It's not clear yet as to whether that was the cause of his fall or the effect from it. It's obvious he can't help but trade with Dave with no fewer than seven of Dave's players on his roster with three of his occupying Dave's starting lineup! Only one of Dave's players is in his starting lineup though.

Neil must be concerned with his QB core. He has only two starters both of which are in the lower half of projections and one potentially in his last season. His superflex spot on bye weeks will be considerably weaker than his opponents. Will he rue he passing up on Trey Lance, Zach Wilson and Mac Jones at the rookie draft?

In stark contrast to his QB core, Neil has one of the most accomplished RB cores in the league. With last season's RB1, clear workhorse rookie in Najee Harris and lucky recipient of the Rams injury misfortune in Darryl Henderson. After that there is a bit of drop off in quality but David Johnson could still be the main man in Houston.

Neil's WRs could certainly be better but is by no means the worst. With two WR2s, a WR3 and three WR4s making up his viable starters it's certainly one of the weaker cores in the league but he improved it recently by converting his 3rd round rookie pick into Mike Evans! An excellent piece of business.

Neil's team, like so many, suffers from the dearth of quality at the TE position. With a TE2 and TE3 he'll be hoping that Hunter Henry lives up to all the money he's being paid.

Unfortunately, and in part due to the lack of QB depth, there are three significant bye week clashes in weeks 7, 9 and 11, against Gareth, Chris and Lee, respectively.

Outside of his RBs it looks likely to be another tough season for Neil. There's certainly some hope with some of his more youthful prospects but would his team be better served in the long-run with the choice of rookies at this year's rookie draft. An outside chance of making the playoffs is possible but could do his team more harm than good. Is it time to trade in those better and older assets for more youth and future picks.

As projected, Mike had a disappointing maiden season but he managed to ship off several of his starters to Dave. Aside from one key addition, Mike's starters mostly come from his draft last year. Is this improvement as his young team develops or stagnation?

With one of the strongest QB lineups, Mike can boast the QB1 and 11. However, beyond this he's not looking so hot. Whilst Tua can fill in during the bye weeks an injury to his top two could cause issues. Mike had the choice of several highly regarded QBs at the Rookie Draft. Would his team look better with Tray Lance, Zach Wilson or even Big Mac Jones rather than the $732 man as backups?

Mike has three stout starting RBs, with an RB1 and two RB2s most likely regularly featuring this season. After those three there's a bit of a drop to an RB3 then a wasteland beyond. Mike's hopes seemingly sit on the shoulders of sophomore Jonathan Taylor. Will JT continue his breakout from the end of last season or will the injuries to the Colts and their potential RBBC rear its ugly head over an 18-week season? If it's the latter there may be consistent but no stud scoring in the team.

If there is a weakness to Mike's team it's his WR core. Trading McLaurin for a TE1 and Hopkins to strengthen his RBs may seem sensible on the surface but it's turned a 2020 strength into a weakness. DK Metcalf the overall WR6 is a stud but after that it's a WR3, a WR4 and a WR6. Mike is relying on a couple of breakouts or bestball-esque selection ability to compete.

Things appear much more fruitful at the TE position. Hockensen appears to be the Lions No. 1 target, Higbee should be semi-reliable but most importantly for the future is Kyle Pitts. He could be a TE1 this year. He could be the TE1 in the future.

He has planned fairly well with two significant bye week clashes: week 9 (vs Gareth) and the potentially crucial week 14 (vs Chris)!

He's certainly got the quality in most positions to make a play for the playoffs. If he makes it, he has a lottery ticket for the belt.

It's a bit of a mystery to me how Dudders finished quite so low in the league when you look at his most of his starters. The randomness of the NFL may explain it. It certainly wasn't poor trading as he only made one. That particular decision is perhaps best left in the past. Projections wise it looks like it may be another tough year with progress being inch by inch. What could have been if Akers had been fit but can your fortunes with a 30-man roster really land on one 22-year old's shoulders?

Much like Neil, there is probably some concern with his QB core. The two starters look good although regression is projected for both. Beyond that there is some uncertainty if there are any week 1 starters. Perhaps Teddy Bridgewater? His saving grace by the time the bye weeks kick in could be his rookie pick of Justin Fields.

As highlighted above, what this RB core could have looked like if the hype surrounding Cam Akers was real. We'll never know. What he's left with is nothing to be sniffed at. An RB1 and an RB2 for both slots. After that though a series of backups.

Dudders has arguably the best WR pairing in Devonte Adams and AJ Brown both expected to be top 7 receivers. After that he has three WR4s. It's a solid core and would make for an exceptional bestball lineup, with the likes of Golladay, Fuller and Antonio Brown.

As with Neil's team, Dudders' team suffers from the dearth of quality at the TE position. His highest ranked TE is the 34-year-old TE20 Jared Cook. It doesn't get any better from there. A trade or massive breakout is needed here to be competitive on a weekly basis.

He has planned fairly well with bye weeks but problems at QB mean that there are significant clashes in weeks 7 (vs Lee) and 13 (vs Jibus) but has a full-strength squad available in week 12 against Alex!

There are a range of outcomes for Mr D where all of his players stay fit and Jared Cook has one final hurrah. There is another possibility where he repeats the difficulties of last year and secures his QB core for the next decade. Sadly at the moment the latter appears to be the more likely outcome.

Last season's Trevor Trophy winner finds himself third in projections and looks set to compete for a non-losers trophy this year. Of all the teams Dave has made some of the most significant changes from his draft. With only 8 of the original 25 remaining and his starting line-up now heavily featuring Neil and Mike's teams he has done a rebuild in nearly one year.

At QB Dave has 4 starters led by the projected QB5 and injury ridden Dak Prescott. If he can stay healthy Dave could have some bumper weeks. The quality behind him has a lot of potential but some uncertainty. Will Stafford settle into his new warm home on the west coast? Is Sam Darnold good now he's clear of 'The Gase Effect'? Is Trevor the new messiah? As things stand, he's rated 5th at superflex but one positive outcome to those questions could help make him a true contender.

With two RB1s backed up by one RB2 and two RB3s, Dave arguably has the strongest RB core in the league. Whilst there is a strength here in consistency and depth, it lacks the absolute stud backs that often feature in weekly and league winning lineups. Could this be a case of the turtle winning the race or will the lack of stud mean that he may only be the bridesmaid?

After the shrewd acquisition and his clear WR1 of Hopkins from Mike, there is a bit of a falloff in depth at WR. Dave follows Hopkins up with two WR2s, two WR4s and a whole load of hope. If you're looking for a weakness in his team, this may be it. Could a Hopkins injury de-rail his campaign and lead to another loser spot and high draft pick?

Another potential weakness is Dave's TEs. He has a load of them but are any of them any good. He's living on a wing and a prayer here but some sensible/lucky streaming could keep him afloat.

He has also planned pretty well with only the week 7 bye week (against Mike) potentially being an issue. He has a full-strength squad available in week 8 against Lee.

With quality and depth in the two most differentiating positions, Dave should make the playoffs this year and with some luck be in with a shot of the belt.

Last season's projected fourth place finisher finds himself a little further down the projections this year. He's made just three additions to the starting team that he drafted, effectively replacing washed up Todd Gurley with 2020 breakout UDFA James Robinson, upgrading his TE and a replacement for Mike Evans.

At QB Chris has just 2 starters coming in at QB2 and QB3. They should be consistent performers but nothing spectacular. A dramatic cut day casualty was Cam Newton – can he find another team willing to make him a starter or will he just be a gadget player? Beyond that he does have one stellar cast member – if only he could keep his member under his towel! 2022 may well be a different story for Chris' QB core.

Chris has one of the stronger and deeper RB cores. An RB1 capable of being the RB1, and the choice of three RB2s means he's capable of those championship winning boom weeks. Not bad and ensuring there'll be some decent points scoring barring a major injury crisis.

Chris has one of the weaker WR cores. It's not all bad though. Led out by two WR2s, a WR3 and a WR5. He's going to need some breakouts to see him through the season.

A common story now is that of TE difficulties. He sacrificed Mike Evans to add TE1 Noah Fant to his side and Gronk has some great name value but not so much fantasy value, coming in at TE15. Not a contending team's positional advantage.

Chris has planned fairly well with significant bye week clashes in weeks 6 (vs Dave), 7 (vs Jebus) and 10 (vs Jebus). He has a full strength side available in week 12 against Neil.

There is the potential for another run to the playoffs if he can turn the depth he has into a competitive side in all positions. If he can buy a ticket, he can win it but does Chris have those stud players of other contenders to push him to a championship or will he be an also ran, once again? If he can't improve at key positions, he looks to be headed for the dreaded loser bowl.

Another seemingly early rebuild who finds themselves in the top five in projections. Only three starters remain from week 1 last year and the bench has also been decimated. Is it because his draft was incredibly poor or because he's making moves to win in the future? Let's have a closer look.

Lee's QB core is an interesting one. His two starters consist of a middle of the road, pretty consistent performer (when it's not blowing a gale in Cleveland) and Jameis Winston who was a fantasy dream but NFL coach's nightmare. Beyond that there is the consistency of Derek Carr and much hyped Trey Lance. But when will his first game leading out the 49ers be? Week 2? Week 7? Week 18? Plenty of potential we can all agree.

Let's face it, Lee's RB core is a disaster zone exacerbated by his loss of Travis Etienne. Josh Jacobs is being rated as a low end RB2 and beyond that it's a load of rookies, but not in the Najee Harris sense, and backups. Can you really enter a season relying on some of the biggest names getting injured to be competitive?

With such uncertainty at QB and mediocrity at RB how the hell is Lee's team rated in the top half by the so-called experts? Well, a major contributing factor is his young and exciting WRs. Two WR1s, and four WR3s will make up the core of his weekly selections. At a mighty average age under 24 this will be his core for years to come (unless he actually wants to improve his RBs, of course).

Once again, the inadequacies of his other positions are made up by positional advantage at TE. He has the WR4 in disguise in Travis Kelce. If Lee intends to compete this is the perfect piece but it won't last forever. Once again if he wants to improve those RBs then he has the perfect piece to trade with.

He has planned pretty well with perhaps two concerning bye weeks at 6 and 8, against Jeeba and Dave, respectively.

Lee's team seems pretty unbalanced going into the season. Has he inadvertently or perhaps deliberately gone ZeroRB? It seems unlikely he'll win the championship with such mediocre or poor RBs but his receiving positions may push him into the playoffs and risk him not snagging another rookie RB in the upcoming draft. He has the means to change his fortunes this year but is his real focus 2022?

Last season's regular season winner and eventual fourth place finish finds himself atop of the projections and looks set to repeat his performance of last year. He just needs a bit more luck than last season to progress further in the playoffs.

At QB Alex has 3 starters led by the projected QB3 and Dynasty darling in Kyler Murray. He has Matt Ryan and Fitzmagic who can come in as his superflex. Whilst not the absolute best (rated at 6th superflex) provided he picks right they should provide consistent scores throughout the season.

Alex finished first without the consensus overall #1 pick in CMC. This should be a concern for us all. Backing CMC up is another RB1 in Washington sophomore Antonio Gibson. After that there is a bit of drop off in quality with three RB3s and some dart-throws/backups beyond that. Is this the one chink in Alex's armour?

With some very smart trading and a wee bit of mortgaging of the future, Alex has a very strong WR core. He has two WR1s in his starting slots (including last year's overall no. 1 in Diggs gifted to him from Chris) and Chris Godwin (a WR2) slipping nicely into his flex spot most weeks.

Perhaps another area where Alex suffered from bad luck last year was at his TE position. Consensus tier one TE George Kittle was injured for much of 2020 and his backup, another fantasy hipster choice in Blake Jarwin, completed one snap before incurring a season ending injury. With both back healthy and picking up another smart choice at the Auction, Alex is looking all set here for this season and beyond.

He has also planned well with no significant bye week clashes, with a full-strength squad available in week 8 against Jebus!

With such an abundance of starting quality and depth in most positions, it's going to need a lot of luck to beat him on a weekly basis and through the playoffs.

Whilst Jebus was projected to finish 7th last year he performed way beyond expectations coming in 3rd. This may have been more down to luck than judgement with him scoring the second fewest points in the league. Somehow he always seemed to play teams at their lowest ebb. Jebus has only retained four of his starters from last season. It's easy to see why Dave and Ross needed to make changes as so many of those are in Jebus' starting lineup. Conversely (and similar to Alex) his bench hasn't changed too much from 2020.

At QB Jebus has five players although only four of these will start in week 1, if there are more than two starting in week 17 I'd be very surprised. His two starters are QB1s with Lamar Jackson having the biggest upside. During bye weeks or through injuries he's going to struggle. Jimmy G may start in week 1 but it'll be a matter of time until Lance takes over, Tyrod is playing in the worst team in the league but there's many a rumour circulating around their QBs? Clearly the weakest part of his team and with a middle-aged man starting it's going to be a problem for some time.

Jebus has bolstered his RB core with three RB1s but this area of the team possibly carries the greatest risk: Saquon had to have one of his knees reconstructed and Derrick Henry is coming off over 370 carries and 2k yards. Statistically speaking a huge fall in production seems inevitable. Beyond that an absolute wasteland. The very definition of wafer thin.

Jebus' WR core prior to Michael Thomas' injury looked up there with the best. Now it's one WR1, two WR2s and two WR3s. It looks good but does he need to sacrifice something here to support his paper thin QB core?

Whilst he isn't blessed with one of the three top tier TEs he does have last years' TE3 and TE6. A bit of luck with streaming these should keep him competitive.

He has also planned ok but his weakness at QB means he may have significant bye week clashes in weeks 7 (vs Chris), 8 (vs Alex), 9 (vs Dave) and 13 (vs Dudders).

If you look at the starters available in the playoffs there is a league winning team with potential top scorers in Lamar, Henry, Jones, Saquon, Hill and Michael Thomas. He's certainly pushed his chips in for this year but can that QB core hold up and what will he do to compete in 2022 and 2023?

Last season's projected winner and eventual runner up finds himself lower in projections this year. You just need to look at his team and the trade league table as to why. You can't make progress against other teams if you're standing still. With no changes to the starting line-up from those he drafted, and a later rookie draft pick meaning he doesn't have an injection of youth to plug and play, it's all looking a bit stagnant for Waller and Russ. So let's take a look at the team that can't be improved.

Two starting QB1s is a good start. Tannehill providing that consistency and Mr Unlimited providing the first half of the season boom. What's after that? A rejuvenated(?) but injured Carson Wentz and then a couple of useless backups. Maybe a mid-season switch between Wilson and Wentz is the masterplan?

Gareth's starting RBs are two solid semi-reliable RB2s in CEH and Miles Sanders with another RB2 Gus Edwards waiting in the wings. The supporting cast is not quite so great. He picked up Javonte Williams who looks like he'll be Melvin Gordon's eventual successor. Beyond that? A lot of third down backs.

Gareth's WR core again looks solid and semi-reliable. A WR1, two WR2s and a WR3 will feature in most weeks for Gareth. All the model of consistency and reliability but not much in terms of championship winning difference makers.

If you want a difference maker then he has than in spades, well spade, at TE. Darren Waller had a tremendous 2020 campaign and looks to be even better in 2021. Not much in the way of backup though. Literally one man – Jonnu Smith.

He has planned pretty well with only one significant bye week clash in Week 7 (vs Neil).

I can see now why Gareth has felt there is no need for changes. A solid lineup that will take him to the playoffs.....only to lose to a team with a couple of studs. No risk, no reward but it's the taking part that counts, right?

Almost everything you need to know about Ross' team last year is that he started week 1 with a rookie WR in his superflex. The man has a keen eye for rookies and was assisted with an enormous dollop of luck – how can you win a superflex league with only two QBs?

Ross' QB situation is certainly better to that of last season. This year he has four starters rather than just one starter. My word two of those starters are good – both QB1s with years of production ahead of them. Beyond that – could be better could be worse. His hopes built on a pocket passer at the Patriots and a man who fumbles and falls over when no-one is near him. Not necessarily a recipe for major fantasy points but what do we know?

Until a trade for a TE and an unfortunate injury, Ross looked like he had a pretty solid RB core. The disintegration of that would be team has turned into a full blooded rebuild. So, what's he left with? An RB4, three RB5s and a whole load of rookies. Will his keen eye for rookie RBs continue?

In the continuing story of Ross' wafer-thin roster is his WR core. Yes, his starters are good - very good in fact. Lamb and McLaurin are both WR1s and Aiyuk is a WR2. As always young and productive. Beyond that? Two WR5s and hopeful youth.

Perhaps TE is where Ross had some depth. Erm, no. He barely has a TE1 never mind depth. Oof – that's a bad looking TE core.

Surely he's planned well for bye week clashes? Alas, with a famine of depth he's going to be looking at lower tier replacements in weeks 6 (vs Neil), 7 (vs Alex), 8 (vs Dudders) and 13 (vs Chris). With his starting QBs gone nor Lamb available in week 7, Alex should absolutely smash Ross! However, he has a fully fit team in week 11 against Gareth.

With unfortunate injuries to a team already lacking depth, Ross has clearly entered the leagues first full bodied rebuild. It's not for the squeamish but the man has a record of picking up good rookies and riding them to victory. It will be a long 2021 season and he's very unlikely to retain the coveted belt but the future could be looking bright with those three first round picks next year.

12. Conclusion

Well done for making it this far. May I be the first to congratulate Alex on his winning the belt.

Don't take what I've said too much to heart. What do I know? Maybe do take what the experts say to heart they got it pretty right last year with everyone but me, Ross and Dave – 70% hit rate is pretty good. There's still time now and in season to change your fortunes – whether that's to win this year or beyond.

In any case, enjoy the highs and lows of another Dynasty season and remember: in the end there can be only one.
